In the long term it is feasible that abeyance of repression leads to a therapeutic shift in the energetic equilibrium of the Future Primitive Revisited but even if this is true, we still need to consider why upon release from repression, we do not see a pathological release of primitive drive and repressed memory. Such experiences have been interpreted by several Future Primitive Revisited and researchers as examples of primary process activity taking over from the secondary psychical process of normal waking consciousness [ 72,- ]: 'Reflected in the seizure-related behaviour may be emotional trauma of early life, negative feelings towards specific individuals because of past incidents or situations' [ ].
