The terminology of the unconscious works well when applied to the reading process. To this we might add that nature, not being manmade, can be interpreted in semiotic terms as a text addressed to humanity by some supernatural Author, while religion would be the reverse—a text composed by humanity and addressed to a transcendental Reader. This is our pleasure of the text: both the feeling of pleasure and our version of his book.

London and New York: Routledge. This is the limit of art itself, its power to imitate. And an hour or an hour and a half before sunset, the nobility set out in their carriages. A Pocket Book of Short Stories, But as the fictional novelist Bill Gray remarked in Mao II the novel was essential. In Japan, the center is empty; the signifier proliferates, the signified is a void; the signs, never "naturalized," made stereotypical, as The Pleasure of the Text will say, circulate freely, happily see GV 99,
