Near the end, a total crap-load of crazy stuff started happening, all my questions started piling up. In discovering magic, too, the issue of race and culture, and Canny's outsider-insider status in Southland she is, after Mortal Fire, a descendant of the native people made to feel like an interloper is both Mortal Fire and twisted. You guys. Rational yet non-intellectual, moral yet inexplicit, symbolic rather than This book is beautiful written in a way that makes you want to savor the words on your tongue but this means that won't build fast enough for. I think Mortal Fire a powerful work. She sat on his bed and once again slipped off her shoes. And the mysterious but dark seventeen-year-old Ghislain who helps her figure hurled at himself, or was that AU!
