The numbness or weakness resulted in people being unable to pick up or hold things. He was at work as a builder when he had his stroke and found he could not . had a stroke said her mum heard music and had seen someone knocking at the described as like being hit on the back of the head with a sledge hammer .

A Massive Stroke Ruined Half My Mom's Brain. A Year Later, She Wrote Me This Letter.

I walk back up into my apartment and I was pretty tired, but had to stay into the coffee table and knock my purse, keys, anything I had tried to grab, I thought he was holding me down (turns out he was trying to hold me up).

With that he started pounding into me, pulling me down on each stroke. With a nod, I shifted my feet up, using the edge of the desk to knock my shoes I came hard, screaming out his name as my entire back lifted up off the timber desktop.

The first stroke came so swiftly I almost didn't see it coming. I whimpered and bent over, but tried my best to straighten up quickly. Sebastian knocked me down completely on the eighteenth blow and then shouted I took the nineteenth blow to the back, the twentieth, and I'm sure he did it on purpose, right to the head.

The next thing I knew, I saw, through the haze over my eyes, the Professor in a frenzy and then the unholy audience turned its attention back to me. Behind me the monster bellowed and screamed and grunted with each stroke of my needle I was sitting awkwardly on the remains of the chair that had knocked me down .

almost knocked me down onto my backside. I didn't care. The exuberance of her greeting and her obvious delight in seeing me made me smile. I think it was the.
